

Four-leafed clovers . . . and brains

You need brains as well as luck to play a winning game of Backgammon. No wonder the grand old game refuses to die and rapidly is teaching the younger set that grandparents knew something about games.

Backgammon is one of the few fascinating games for two players. Yet under modern rules many more players may enjoy every move of the game and share in the spoils of victory. "Doubling" has put new strategy into the game with more and faster thrills than contract bridge ever knew.

May we suggest that the equipment for the game should be of a quality that adds something to the pleasure of playing—that a folding black, ebonized wood board with a cork field is one any hostess will be happy to own.

We have a complete assortment of boards from $12 up and suitable equipment for all. Expert tuition in Backgammon by appointment.
